Have a plan.
Don’t sign up for any site before you know what you want to say to what audience – and what you want them to get out of it.

Keep it:
• Simple - If anyone from your best friend to a neighbor can’t understand you, rephrase your message.
• Interesting - We live in an age of short attention spans. Use catchy phrases and striking images to capture readers’ attention.
• Relevant - Know your audience. How can your content reflect your visitors’ interests and behaviors?

Post:
• Often - Social media sites and feeds must be updated frequently (from once a day to once a week). Why visit your site again if there’s nothing new?
• Strategically - Joining every site out there will be overwhelming and exhausting; start out with one or two and go from there.
• Wisely – Social media can be seen by everyone, and it’s all too easy for tone to shift from informal to unprofessional.

Make friends and try again: Find others, make connections, and add links. Become part of a larger network in order to reach others. It takes time to acquire followers to your sites and feeds; don’t give up if you’re not immediately noticed.
